Abstract

This roundtable will discuss Digital Storytelling as a tool for deep learning, and provide a framework for researching and evaluating the process. An emerging theory of storytelling as learning and reflection on practice will be discussed, as well as the role of digital storytelling in teacher education. This roundtable will focus on a proposed research design to collect data about digital storytelling in education; several digital storytelling rubrics used to assess completed projects; and a Literature Review on Digital Storytelling.

Digital Storytelling: Convergence

This figure graphically demonstrates that Digital Storytelling facilitates the convergence of four student-centered learning strategies: student engagement, reflection for deep learning, project-based learning, and the effective integration of technology into instruction.

If Digital Storytelling is to become accepted in today’s schools, it will be important to collect data to be able to draw conclusions about the impact that the process has on student learning, motivation and engagement and how teaching practices and strategies change with technology integration through digital storytelling.

This document outlines a potential study of the issues related to learning and reflection through digital storytelling. The data collected will provide research-based evidence on the effect digital storytelling has on student learning, motivation, and engagement. To that end we will seek to identify what conditions facilitate and encourage students to care about their work and be proud of it. Can we identify the conditions necessary to motivate students to reflect on their learning as a record of their growth over time and as a story of their learning? Some of the key research questions that will guide the study include:

- How do digital stories provide evidence of deep learning?
- Under what conditions can digital stories be successfully used to support assessment for learning?
- Under what conditions do students take ownership of their digital stories?
- What are the benefits of developing digital stories as perceived by students, teachers, administrators, and/or parents?
- What are perceived obstacles to implementing digital storytelling with P-12 students and how can they be overcome?
- How does the quality of paper-based reflection differ from digital stories?

Data could be generated through surveys, on-site observations, online discussions, and journals, as well as the aggregation of student performance-based assessment data.

The research should draw upon the established literature and theoretical constructs with validated research instruments and data collection protocols. A more comprehensive literature review is included at the end of this document. These resources could include:

- Reflection: Jennifer Moon, Donald Schön, John Dewey
- Storytelling as Learning: Maxine Alterio & Janice McDrury
- Motivation: Self-Determination Theory, Intrinsic Motivation (Deci & Ryan): http://www.psych.rochester.edu/SDT/
- Student Engagement and Qualities of Engaging Schoolwork (Schlechty Center): http://schlechtycenter.org
- Technology Competency: ISTE NETS-T and NETS-S plus Essential Conditions
- Portfolio Development: Teachers (Lyons, Shulman), K-12 Students (Hebert, Davies), Post-Secondary (Yancey, Cambridge, Tosh)
- Assessment FOR Learning: Stiggins, Davies, QCA: http://www.qca.org.uk/afl/
